

‘Love It If We Made It’

The 1975

Weekly Report 11

10/29 to 11/4

This past week in ISM I was able to do a lot of reflecting on my topic and on my studies from both this year and last year; looking at how and why I got into concert promotions in the first place. By having the opportunity to look back on what I have done so far in ISM, I needed to analyze what career path I was going in, allowing me to the present that path in my research presentation I was going to do this coming week.

Looking back at my year and a half in ISM, I was able to see how much I have grown as a professional and as a student because of how I have been able to track and document my progress since the August of last year. In addition to watching myself grow as a person, I have been able to see my topic slowly change and adapt to my passions, likes, and dislikes; watching my potential career field shape and morph into something I am fully passionate about that combines all my interests and abilities into one profession.

Going forward, I cannot wait to see how two years in the ISM program will have transformed not only me into a professional who is prepared to enter college and the workforce, but how it will shape my final product into something that showcases my strengths and talents, providing me with the opportunity to sell myself and my knowledge to potential employers and companies in the future.
